

Dear Mr. Smith,

I recently learned of that your knowledge, opinions and ideas about holding people to people exchange. I am particularly interested in your method of a new participant's care at the hall of an exchange meeting but I need more advice to decide how to hold our first exchange meeting.

If possible, would you be able to send me advice from a different viewpoint about the holding method how you hold a meeting, its their effect and their its faults. You can send either by return email or by telephone. Please find my contact details below.

I appreciate your time in attending to my request and look forward to receiving the relevant information soon.

Yours sincerely,

Kazuo Yamada
Assistant Manager,
Urban Planning Department of  prefectural government
P:81 ** ****
E:k-yamada@prefecture.jp

Dear Kazuo,

Thanks for submitting your Week 3 task. You have done quite well, particularly in the structure of your email writing. I have a few suggestions / comments to help you further:

- Saying “I recently learned that your knowledge...” is correct in a lot of sentences. However, it doesn't work in your sentence because the sentence is incomplete. You needed to say what exactly you learned about that knowledge. For example, if you had said,
“*I recently learned that your knowledge opinions and ideas about holding people to people exchange is exceptional”, this would be fine as you are explaining what you learned (that his knowledge is exceptional). Therefore, I changed your sentence to “I recently learned of your knowledge...” This simply means that you learned that he had this knowledge.*

- I added “in your method” because you needed to qualify the noun “method” with a possessive adjective to show whose “method” you were talking about. My, your, his, her, its, our, and their are the English possessive adjectives, used with nouns to show possession or ownership.

“That’s my folder.” (My is an adjective which shows that I am the owner of the folder.)

“I like your hair.”

“The dog is licking its paw.”

- “the holding method” is an unusual expression and not what a native speaker would say (even though it’s grammatically ok!) Instead, we would say “I need some advice about how you hold your meetings ...”
- I changed “their” to “its” because a pronoun usually refers to something earlier in the text (its antecedent) and must agree in number — singular/plural — with the thing to which it refers. Since the antecedent in this sentence is singular (your original antecedent was “the holding method” and I changed it to “a meeting” - - both are singular), you need a singular pronoun to replace it. “Its” is singular and “their” is plural.

I hope these comments have helped you. If you have any further questions please feel welcome to ask at any time.

Best wishes,

Jo